

New York Espresso Coffee Mania at Zibetto's!

Giulia Madron (July 30, 2014)

Italians know where to go to have a good coffee. In New York, they found the mecca for the perfect espresso: Zibetto Espresso Bar. Located at 1385 6th Ave, the venue will now open another spot on 42nd and 5th Ave, spreading the real Italian coffee tradition in the Big Apple.

You can take everything away from Italians but not coffee. And when we talk about coffee, in Italy, we are only talking about Espresso, which, if it's prepared in the right way, can become a real masterpiece. At Zibetto Espresso Bar [2], in the heart of Midtown Manhattan, they know it.

Anastasios Nougos, the owner, is a man with a mission. Son of Italian immigrants (his father was from Palermo, Sicily) who emigrated to Sweden, Anastasios moved to New York in 2004 with one thing on his mind: opening a real Italian espresso bar.

"I remember my dad always complaining that he could not find a good espresso. And in New York neither could I. So when I moved here I decided to open this place" says Anastasios.

Zibetto Espresso Bar [2] opened in 2006, bringing to the Big Apple the culture of real Italian coffee.

"I worked with a person from Bari whose grandfather owned one of the first bars in Bari back in the 1920s," explains Anastasios. "I learned the trade from him. I am an extension of his legacy. Here we do coffee in the same way, very traditional."

At Zibetto's is all about coffee. And a good coffee is all about quality.

"We have our own personal blend coffee," says the owner of Zibetto, whom, since 2007, brings the coffee from Italy and roasts it in Poland. "The arabica quality is originally from Brazil and Colombia while the robusta quality is from India."

But besides the quality of the coffee, an Italian espresso, as we said, it's a real art form. It's not only about making a short coffee out of a machine. It's also about the passion you put into making it. And that is something Anastasios and Mikael Olsson, co-owner of Zibetto, are always looking for in a barista who wants to work at Zibetto.

"What we are looking for in a barista who wants to work here is not the fact that he or she is Italian. Of course, if they speak Italian it would be a plus. But what we are really looking for is a person who is proud of his profession, which is an attribute that you see when you walk into an espresso bar in Italy. This is not just a profession. It's an art," affirms Anastasios.

Since its opening, Zibetto Espresso Bar was a success, attracting Americans but most of all attracting Italians. And we all know that where there is good coffee, there are Italians.

"Italians are magnets to good coffee and they know where to go," says Anastasios, who knows very well not only how to make a perfect espresso (trust me, I tried it!) but also how much Italians appreciate good things in life. And coffee is one of these. When you keep that in mind, the game is over. You win.

Right now, Zibetto Espresso Bar is opening another spot on 42nd street and 5th Avenue. What can we say? We wish Zibetto success that will last for a long time. Even though, when it comes to coffee, please, keep it short!

For more information about Zibetto Espresso Bar check out their Facebook page [3]

Source URL: <http://108.61.128.93/magazine/dining-in-out/articles-reviews/article/new-york-espresso-coffee-mania-zibettos>

Links

[1] <http://108.61.128.93/files/zibettoespressobarny1406733324.jpg>

[2] <http://www.zibettoespresso.com/>

[3] https://www.facebook.com/pages/Zibetto-Espresso-Bar/154629307886049?sk=photos_stream